A motorist made frequeunt trips between two cities. One night, at the hieght of a storm, he noticed a difERENCE in the way his car handled. Quickly he stopped his auto.

"It is beyound beleif," he muttered, "but I have a flat tire."

When he checked his spare he was forced to addmit that it was also without air.

"This seems to inddicate I must make a decission," he told himself. "I have the choise of walking miles through the rain or I can remain with my car."

As he pondered, he saw a light up ahead. It blinked out, then came on to continu shining. It was then the driver remembered that a monastery was close by. Quickly he walked foreward. Once the light dissap- peared, but then shone again. Within minutes the motorist reached the great front gate.

In a short convercation the wet man was able to discribe his problem to a monk.

"I'm happy to asist you," said the genarous monk. "Alloww us to give you a meal and a bed for the night. You won't desturb us in the least. In the morning we will help repair your tire."

The cold, wet motorist drew a breth of relief. "That will emprove my evening," he said in an honnest manner.

At the monk's comand the motorist was given a large meassure of fish and chips, which he ate quickly.

Afterrward he decided to colect his table service and to compliment the monk who had prepared the meal.

"Are you the fish friar?" he asked a monk in the kitchen.

"No, sir. I'm the chip monk," was the quick reply.
